Comedian Andrew Norelli has a nice middle path approach. He's not the fuzzy harmless aw shucks comedian. Nor is he the push you right to the edge and make you hang on for dear life by your fingernails while your envelope is stretched to the point of traumatic mental pain. (Personally I like the latter, but I have a stretchy envelope!) He pulls off smart with a straight, even self-deprecating approach. He also smoothly strings together a series of interesting topics – about which he shares surprising viewpoints. How do you go from Lady Gaga – a bit in which he does not go the route you expect in his pop culture analysis – to how Staples is exhausting? He tackles cinema – the power of the Swayze. He dashes the pizza delivery boy porn mythos. He touches on the archetypal male fear of commitment by expressing his fear of Eharmony. And so forth. His light but bright approach to humor and social commentary makes him endearing and funny.
