Reviews

"The Disco Exorcist, from Director Richard Griffin is a lovingly created homage to the golden age of porn, bad hair, and grindhouse horror prevalent in the 1970's. Filled with nudity, humor, Satanism, penis abuse and nudity.....did I say nudity twice? Why yes, yes I did! Filled with funbags, fur pies and swinging dicks, this is exactly the type of film I wouldn't recommend watching with mom (unless of course you and your mom are more disturbed than myself), but in lieu of that, you might want to get out the hand cream, tissues, and neaten up your spank station. Once this baby starts to roll you aren't likely to take your eyes off the screen or your hand off....well I'll leave the rest to your foul assumptions. As a horror film, Disco doesn't skimp on the gore, and as a comedy never drags it feet. The editing work by Griffin and Sarah Nicklin combined with the creative cinematography of Jill Poisson keeps the pace fast and furious while Daniel Hildreth's period music keeps the film rooted in a bygone era of cocaine fueled pulsating dance beats. If you like your films funny, foul, and fermented in polyester you may want to make an appointment with The Disco Exorcist!"

"The Disco Exorcist is a brutal, blasphemous horror sex comedy drenched in the kind of 70's era Catholic fear, evoked as only a lapsed Catholic can. It is an example of what happens when every single member of your cast and crew are synced up on the same page and moving in the same direction. It is excruciatingly funny, genuinely harrowing at times and delivers on every promise that that killer trailer and excellent poster by Stephen Romano made. The Disco Exorcist is a howl from start to finish, loaded with nudity and dancing dangerously close to being classified a porn movie."
