In June of 1978, the Cramps played to a room full of enthusiastic patients at the Napa State Mental Institute and instantly established a benchmark in public rock. The Cramps were at the peak of their engaging sound. They had just finished recording "Gravest Hits."

"...it becomes hard to tell who are really the mental patients."

Midway through the second song, a young woman commands the stage and begins sharing the mic with Lux." By the time the "Human Fly" is played, a real ho-down is occurring on and off the stage with the audience members dancing about, grabbing at the mic and embracing each other - all of which add to the spectacle of this once-in-a-lifetime performance!

Warning: This is rough punk rock footage with some audio-visual distortion. But, it contains some of the best and most primal content ever filmed!

Mystery Plane, Way I Walk, What's Behind the Mask, Human Fly, Domino, Love Me, Twist & Shout, TV Set

"I can't imagine anything being as unique as this show; it is a must-have for collectors. It becomes hard to tell who are really the mental patients." - Joe Rees, Target Video
