DVD Review - Fan of the Dead

Directed by Nicolas Garreau

MVD Visual

Fans of the Living Dead series rejoice! Although this hour long “documentary” by George A. Romero enthusiast Nicolas Garreau plays out like a French tourist video, there is enough content and interesting “behind the Dead” stories here to satisfy all perambulatory postmortem puritans.

Garreau travels all the way from France with his trusty video camera to visit filming locations in the Pennsylvania countryside where the legendary cult classic Living Dead series was shot. Meeting original cast members at the Pittsburgh Comic-Con and asking sophomoric questions in broken English is done one better with visits to shooting locations as well as hands on training with original props from the Living Dead movies.

A definite find for the comic book minded, marvel as Nicolas and a large group of “Dead” enthusiasts are taken on a guided tour of the basement featured in Night of the Living Dead. Ooo and awe as your faithful narrator and videographer roams through the Monroeville Mall featured in Dawn of the Dead. Bust off the top of your head and spray blood everywhere as bus load after bus load of people who still live with their parents roam the military base where soldiers and scientists hid out the zombie apocalypse in Day of the Dead. Its all here, in glorious... colour?

Save yourself the cost of a stay in a Pittsburgh hostel and a potential nasty death when the dead roam the Pennsylvania countryside once again by enjoying this video in the comfort of your own home. Although there is no actual footage from the Living Dead films themselves, this is still a decent companion to Mr. Romero’s masterworks even if Mr. Garreau’s English is hard to understand at times.
