The site editor and I are HUGE Alice Cooper fans - so much so that he gave this to me to review as he is too biased. I have had this "classic" dubbed on VHS for years, so I always knew this was a cheesy horror flick, but since Alice was in it it was AWESOME damnit! Now that I had to review it I stepped back and took it in as a real movie. This was made in 1984 in between Alices' odd years as a musician. There are two songs that were exclusive to this fine movie - "Identity Crises" and "See Me In The Mirror" - which have now finally surfaced on his box set. Ya see, Alice ("Vince" in the movie - how clever as that is his real name?) just can't come up with a video he likes so he decides to take a bunch of goons and his girlfriend (Vera) to the childhood mansion so that they can shoot it themselves. However, the community has problems with wild dogs attacking people and soon another bunch of local idiots think that Vince is the "Monster Dog" himself and are set out to kill him. An hour into the movie we finally see the "rabid" dogs attacking and killing everyone in sight - including Vince - who leaves his girlfriend in the middle of nowhere without transportation but they fail to show what happens to her after Vinces' demise. Classy huh? Most of the time the words don't match the mouth action [The Coop's voice is completely dubbed sounding like he's holding that enormous honker of his the entire time he's speaking. - Ed.] which makes for an annoying watch on top of the horrible story line and cheesy acting. BUT if you must have it all, it's finally available, although it was cheaply thrown together with junk extras to boot.
