Heads Will Roll (and Probably Bobble)

There are only approximately 439 shopping days left until Christmas (right?), but we here at Minimum Gauge are just about to make your shopping list a little shorter, assuming your grandpa is a huge fan of controversial underground Punk Rock icons. And bobbleheads. Aggronautix, manufacturers of what it calls “throbbles,” just announced the latest addition to its line — Plasmatics frontwoman Wendy O Williams. For the kids reading this, she was the Lindsay Lohan of the early '80s ... if Lindsay Lohan wore duct tape on her exposed nipples, sported a bleached-white mohawk and died from a self-inflicted gunshot wound in the woods behind her house (Lohan's about three 8-balls away from that right now, the way we see it). The latest throbbles follows figurines of Milo (from Descendents), Tesco Vee (of the Meatmen), two GG Allins and a “double throbbles” featuring Blag the Ripper and HeWhoCanNotBeNamed from The Dwarves. It's a great way to de-nerdify your bobblehead collection (ever so slightly — hey, you're the one with a bobblehead collection!) and they make great conversation pieces. On the negative side, the “conversation” will involve you explaining that Allin was known for shitting on stage and rolling around in it. On the plus side, the bobbling head is excellent for recreating drug seizures. And your Alex Rodriguez bobblehead has been begging for a major ass-kicking ever since you got him.
