

Cutting Crew "Live At Full House"

(ARD Video)

by Paul Autry

I can't believe someone took the time to put out a Cutting Crew DVD. I mean, really, the only song most people really care about is "I Just Died In Your Arms Tonight," which was a pretty cool tune if I do say so myself. Hell, I'll be honest with you, I heard that song on the radio and I liked it enough to actually go out and buy their album. It wasn't too bad. At the time, I thought they were a 2nd rate version of Duran Duran. Remember, this was back in 1985. So, that was the opinion of a teen who was more into the whole glam/hair metal scene.

Anyway, this concert comes from a German television show. So, you know it's gonna be a good quality show. You're just not getting the full Cutting Crew concert experience because, unfortunately, it's only an eight song performance. But, look on the bright side...you get some of the Cutting Crew's best material, which includes "Fear Of Falling," "I've Been In Love Before," "One For The Mocking Bird" and, of course, "I Just Died In Your Arms Tonight." So, it's a nice, quick blast from the past for those of you who might have been into 80's pop music.

Also featured on this release is a five minute interview with Nick van Eede and Kevin Scott Macmichael which, to be honest, was kind of a pain in the ass to watch. Because of the language difference, you've got one voice speaking in English and another voice talking in German. Now, I usually complain about having to "read" anything on the television. But, in this case, I think sub-titles would have been a much better choice. But, then again, it's only a five minute interview and, it's not like you're not learning anything new about the band. You can find more information on them by doing a quick search on the internet. Besides, the concert more than makes up for it.

<http://www.ARD-VIDEO.de>

<http://www.myspace.com/cuttingcrewmusic>