It starts out in documentary fashion with interviews and testimonies and actually lulls you into a sense of security.

Much in the way that "The Gods Must Be Crazy" starts as a documentary and turns into a hilarious comedy "Muirhouse" turns into a great edge of the seat, paranormal thriller.

It follows the pattern of ghost hunting stories where the investigators end up talking about the history of the place and their feelings but nothing really happens.

Then things do start to happen when the lights go out.

The lonely investigator returns to find furniture has moved, hears noises, screams, the sounds of piano (and no, Bill Murray is not the source of the piano playing) and the tension rises.

Its a great flick that will have you jumping out of your socks.

Shriekfest \(http://www.shriekfest.com/\) has more great movies in store for the weekend begining at noon at the Raleigh Studios in Hollywood and ending Sunday night.
