International harvest of music from the UK to Russia

This week's column kicks off with a 2011 release that got lost in the shuffle, followed by up-to-date releases from a Los Angeles band, some Soviet post-punkers, a British singer/songwriter now residing in Atlanta and an Alabama husband/wife duo that longtime readers will be familiar with.

'All Wood and Doors,' James Lee Stanley and Cliff Eberhart (Beechwood Recordings/MVDAudio, HHHH1/2)

This CD was released mid-2011. Acoustic guitarist/vocalist James Lee Stanley had already released "All Wood and Stones" (with John Batdorf, who appears here) when he met Doors drummer John Densmore, who offered to play percussion should Stanley ever do an acoustic Doors album. Once Stanley and Eberhart met, that album became reality. Other notables participating include Timothy B. Schmit (Eagles), Paul Barrere (Little Feat), Peter Dinklage (Monkees) and Doors guitarist Robby Krieger.

Good news for folks like me is that Danny and Matt's vocals are not Cookie Monster variety and that they have good harmonies. Things aren't as hooky as songs from classic power-pop and punk, but there are tuneful highlights like both versions of "Open Door" and the drum-powered electric version of "Move On."

Downloading might be preferable for this one because five songs (even in two versions) are more like an EP than an album.

'Vladivostok,' Mumiy Troll (The Village, HHH1/2)

This April 24 CD is the first English-language release from one of Russia's longest-standing s, doing acoustic guitar-driven versions of their s succeeded. Highlights include "Love Me Two Times," "Crystal Ship," "Touch Me," "Soul Kitchen" and "Moonlight Drive."

well. Snag this album if you want to hear it done differently.

'ATTALOSS,' Attaloss (Rock Ridge Music/Warner Music Group/ADA, HHH)

from L.A. modern rockers Attaloss (Danny Aquiluz/vocals, Chris Johnson/guitar, Matt Geronimo/guitar and vocals, Lorenzo Perea/bass and Dakota Clark/drums) and it showcases two sides of the band by presenting five songs in both high-energy electric and stripped-down acoustic
