

Search

Go

Login or Register

- Home
- NEWS
- WEATHER
- VIDEO
- POLITICS
- SPORTS
- ON TV
- ABOUT
- CONNECT

DEVELOPING: WATCH IT LIVE: CONTINUING COVERAGE OF ACTIVE SEARCH FOR BOMB SUSPECT (OTHER SUSPECT DEAD)

Weather forecast:
Clouds, fog

MEMA: If you're at work in or around Boston, you can go home

Suspect's friend: Dzhokhar was influenced by his older

Mass. State Police: Controlled explosion planned in Cambridge, Mass.

Officer injured in manhunt identified

Get your NECN traffic report here

Review: House of Love falls short on new album

April 9, 2013, 4:42 pm

Email
Print
Facebook
Tweet

By JAMES H. COLLINS

House of Love, "She Paints Words in Red" (Cherry Red Records)

House of Love first emerged on the British music scene in the late 1980s and had some moderate success with singles like "Shine On" and "I Don't Know Why I Love You." Their early sound was somewhere between the Smiths and the Stone Roses, and in many ways the band's attempts at breaking through to wider audiences were thwarted by those powerhouses of the British rock scene.

But House of Love always had talent. They struggled with drugs, bad producers and feuding among themselves. By 1993, the band had called it quits. They reunited in 2003, recorded an album in 2005 and now in 2013, have delivered "She Paints Words in Red."

Unfortunately, their new album is lackluster and saccharine. Some of the melodies are sweet enough and not entirely unlistenable, like the opening track, "A Baby Got Back on its Feet," which shows promise and cues the listener that maybe some more interesting material will follow.

But the remaining 11 songs are riddled with cliches, especially "Hemingway" and "Money Man." The tracks will valiantly vie for your attention for the three minutes or so of their recorded existence with competent musicianship and decent production, but ultimately will fail.

Tags:

RELATED STORIES

1 of 2 Mass. bomb suspects dead; suburbs shut down

15m

MEMA: If you're at work in or around Boston, you can go

14m

Suspect's friend: Dzhokhar was influenced by his older brother

32m

COMMENTS

In the wake of the bombings at the Boston Marathon, will you now think differently about attending large public events? (Poll Closed)

Yes 38.29% (827 votes)

No 61.71% (1,333 votes)

Total Votes: 2,160

Like

1 of 2 Mass. bomb suspects dead; suburbs shut down

Surviving bomb suspect identified as 19-year-old Dzhokhar Tsarnaev

MEMA: If you're at work in or around Boston, you can go home

Shelter in place remains in effect but it doesn't prevent employees from going home

Suspect's friend: Dzhokhar was influenced by his older brother

The 19-year-old's friend said Dzhokhar revered Tamerlan, really looked up to him; friend believes Dzhokhar was influenced to do something he didn't want to do