Bulletboys-10c Billionaire

Chaivis Records

When the Bulletboys released the Za-Za album that began their downward spiral from there forward The Bulletboys moved away from the Van Halen-esque sound. If you followed the band you know that formula brought them success and gained them notoriety as a fun, party band. After that album they disbanded and the Bulletboys as we once knew them were never the same. Since then they've reformed and released a number of records the only mainstay being Marq Torien with various line-ups which at time have included original members. I don't need to tell you that the Bulletboys' albums after Freakshow haven't been received well to say the least, but 10c Billionaire just might be worth your time and money.

Don't think for a second that this is the second coming of the Bulletboys and no they haven't gone back to the bad boy boogie, rock 'n' roll sound of old. They are boasting a modern sound that is a hybrid of modern rock and what once was termed alternative rock. That might not do much to motivate you to get out of the house and track down a copy of 10c Billionaire down but there are some nuggets on the album. If you can put your feelings about the new direction aside (which I know might be difficult) you'll also hear there is some good after somewhat generic and uninspiring opening tracks. Things really pick up on mid way through the record with "Girls Kissin' Girls," Jenna Star," "Road To Nowhere" and "Save The World." I know four tracks don't make an entire album but those four tracks are
