What do you do when you've been on every label from Interscope to Sub Pop, collaborated with Eddie Vedder, named your band after a porno flick and wear 5-gallon cowboy hats while screaming out songs like "Rock Your Ass" and "I Want The Drugs"? Well, the self-proclaimed "Greatest Rock Band in the World" released "Supersuckers – From the Audio/Video Dept. – Live in Anaheim" in early august of 2004, hoping to round out a surprisingly solid discography.

However, the DVD itself leaves much to be desired. While the audio quality is crisp, the gritty video quality and a mediocre performance by the group make the concert a forgettable one. But the Supersuckers do get some of it right: the guitar of Dan "Thunder" Bolton is nothing short of astonishing as heard on tracks such as "The Evil Powers of Rock-N-Roll" and "Supersucker Drive-By Blues". There is also a feeble bonus disc of their "country" roots. There is no doubt that the loyal fans of the Suckers will herald this disc as the end-all authority in "supersucking," but the average listener may have the urge to compare the disc to the band's namesake.
