

During WWII, more than a thousand women signed up to fly with the U.S. military. Wives, mothers, actresses and debutantes who joined the Women Airforce Service Pilots (WASPs) test-piloted aircraft, ferried planes and logged 60 million miles in the air. Thirty-eight women died in service. But the opportunity to play a critical role in the war effort was abruptly canceled by politics and resentment, and it would be 30 years before women would again break the sex barrier in the skies. The women appearing in interviews tell some amazing stories about their wartime service. The WASPs faced real danger while flying, had to battle discrimination and even sabotage, and their unit was disbanded while it was still very useful. But they paved the way for other women in the military, and this film tells their fascinating story.

What would your child do if he or she were approached by a sexual predator? Working with an NBC affiliate, local law enforcement and the FBI, the filmmakers went out to see how the average child would respond to such a threat. These were kids with parents who had taught them, time and time again, never to open the door or to leave with a stranger. It was shocking to watch by hidden camera as these children, one by one, did the exact opposite of what they had been taught. Is there anything more we can do to protect our children from predators? Yes. This Emmy Winning DVD is designed to teach you and your children what to do. It is a full-length, instructional program.
