Bobby Womack – Soul Seduction Supreme

Picture: C    Sound: C+
Extras: C-    Film: B-

Bobby Womack is one of the great soul vocalists of the 1970s, but he also happened to play guitar and was a major musician in albums by some very key artists. At the now-defunct United Artists Records, he hit with Harry Hippie, That's The Way I Feel About Cha and Lookin' For A Love. Soul Seduction Supreme takes an earlier short film about his career not too long after that period before Disco and big record label interference took their toll on R&B and the music industry in general.

Lasting only 77 minutes, you get some behind the scenes footage that may be more than you want to see (like Womack going to take a shower or bath here and there for whatever reason) inter-spliced with nine of his hits and a few other choice cuts. The music performances are good and he has a decent band, but the film overall is not long enough or focused enough to show us the artist in depth, while more music might have also helped. The result is mixed and too short, though big fans will be happy even this exists. It is worth a look for all serious R&B fans.

The 1.33 X 1 image is a little softer than expected for something shot on film, indicating an analog transfer of the 16mm materials. The audio is also from the simple stereo materials that sound a generation down, though a Dolby Digital 5.1 mix is included. Too bad it does not have many surrounds or the kind of fidelity one would expect from Mr. Womack's recordings. The only extra are previews for other titles from the Cherry Red DVD label.
