Ultimate Sessions Ira Opper

are just a few of the moments showcased in the video. Perhaps its most striking attribute is how it shows the progression of surfing over time. Watching each session lends a clear scope that is sure to be captivating to any audience interested in the evolution of surfing. While the video doesn't have any really huge waves or big airs, it's full of idyllic waves that universally compose the dreams of every surfer.—Nick Jiampa

Peel: The Peru Project T.J. Barrack and Wes Brown

Peel is a surf video infused with the beautiful but violent history and culture of the Peruvian people. This is a beautifully documented film with some amazing surfing as 2004 ASP Women's Champ Sofia Mulanovich, Peruvian legend Magoo De La Rosa, and Quiksilver surfer Gabriel Aramburu reveal to Mark Healey, Randy Bonds, and small crew of travelers, the perfection that Peru holds. You get a lot in this video: theories about Peruvians being the first surfers, amazing footage of Machu Picchu, and the adventurous Hawaiians and Californians confronted with the economic poverty, natural beauty, and perfect waves that Peru has to offer.—Nick Jiampa

Freakside: A Jamie O'Brien Film Jamie O'Brien and Tim Reardon

Freakishly coordinated and versatile in all conditions, Jamie O'Brien is one of the world's most spectacular surfers. So it's no surprise that Freakside (directed, edited, and produced by the freak himself) is one of the most mind-blowing, ego-deflating, and envy-producing surf flicks of the year—a one-stop shop for any fan of radical surfing. Also, if you didn't think Jamie had a sense of humor, just check out the hilarious North Shore redux scene—it's classic.—Forrest Mack
