Formed in 1996 and dissolved in 2001 on Halloween night, the Murder City Devils enjoyed a successful yet short-lived existence in the west coast punk scene. In 2004, James Bazan and Jeff Baker released this documentary, entitled "Rock and Roll Won't Wait", on the Seattle (not Detroit) based group. The filmmakers ended up with a subtle masterpiece. Fans hoping to experience life on the road or understand what pisses off keyboardist Leslie Hardy the most will be pleased. They will hear the story of how Gabe the Roadie confronted Dennis Rodman over a bottle of Jagermeister.

The disc features one-on-one interviews, extensive coverage of all major shows (including the Dallas, TX gig with Pearl Jam), and countless backstage footage. The DVD offers unparalleled behind-the-scenes material, such as MCD hanging out at an arcade, stranded at a Chevron when their van breaks down, packing up after a show in a UCSC basement, and even an interview with the roadie's parents. Music quality is well above par for most of the video, with solid editing and too many camera angles to count. All is revealed in this underrated time capsule of a video.
