ProGGnosis Comments & Reviews

Marc	Published on: 8 Feb 2006 I don't really understand the title of this DVD... A Rush of Adrenaline. The show we get to view and listen to is very much in the purest unplugged tradition. Singing - acoustic guitar - piano, this done in a joyfull and relaxed manner. Ten of the fifteen pieces on this DVD are from the band that Barrett-Nolan share... Pendragon. I must admit to liking more the symphonic-prog versions of these songs, but I am also quite surprised on how well the transition was made to their acoustic incantations. The unplugged versions really lets the listener realise that these are very well written songs and Barrett-Nolan do give excellent performances.

The five other tracks are from diverse Nolan projects. In my opinion the material is not as strong, but some of his better songs were selected and sprinkled into the Pendragon music, I must admit that it is interesting to hear them.

All in all I would say that A Rush of Adrenaline is a must have for Pendragon fans, giving you a chance to revisit songs that are dear to you, and the Barrett-Nolan performance is of the highest level expected from these talented musicians. Adding that the filming and sound of the DVD is just incredible, my highest recommendation can be given without any reservations.
