

AUSTIN Edition

Few outside of the crustiest punks can (or should try to) pull off the "GG Allin look." Particularly toward the end of his life, Allin was a frequently naked, bloated mess- shorn of all body hair, covered with homemade tattoos, and scars, sporting a Ghengis Khan mustache, and smeared with his own blood and excrement. Yet because he took his distaste for authority and conformity to such an extreme degree, Allin remains a style icon to scores of maladjusted misanthropes who puke at the word "style." It's unlikely any of the participants in this look-alike contest will be shitting on stage or shoving hypodermic needles in their arm- hopefully- but you're bound to see plenty of guys you wouldn't want to take home with you. Prior to the judging, Beerland will screen Hated, the 1994 Allin documentary directed by Old School's Todd Phillips.
