An Interview With Dave Brock Of Hawkwind

November 7th, 2007 by zzsimonb

During the 1970's one of the leading forces in the British Prog Rock movement was Hawkwind, this band had a sound which they called 'Space Rock' relying heavily on the use of electronics and toured with what had to have been the best light show of the era. Their studio albums were wonderful, but this really was a band that was better on stage, the word awesome springs to mind when describing a live concert.

It was a great discovery to find a very active in the music world, and that the original founding member Dave Brock is still leading this merry band of musical innovators. Through the wonders of the internet I tracked Dave Brock down and managed to get a short interview with him.

Dave, let me firstly say thank you for spending a few minutes with Blogger News Network. I was looking at the family tree of Hawkwind and over the years there have been a number of line up changes, has this effected the continuity?

The short answer, is not really. Yes, we have had many people come and go, and every one of them has given us something a little new. But overall the style of the sound has remained constant.

I believe that the first time I saw Hawkwind perform was around 1971, and you had a cutting edge lighting and visual show. Is this still an important part of your shows?

The visual aspect of Hawkwind was a very conscientious choice, it adds another dimension to the music. And yes it is still a very large part of our concerts.

You were one of the pioneers of the synthesizer, but I am not sure you used a moog, what synth were you using in the early 70's?

No I never used a Moog, I was and indeed still am a fan of the E.M.S. (Electronic Music Studio), synthesizers, however both Del (Dettmer) and Tim

If you don't stand for something you might fall for a damn
