

Tim Buckley
"My Fleeting House" (MVD Visual)

by Paul Autry This first ever Tim Buckley DVD is a documentary that offers you a collection of rare television performances...and not just a clip...you get the full performance. Actually, there's eleven full performances and three partial ones, including appearances on The Monkees Show, Old Grey Whistle Test, The Christian Licorice Show and Late Night Line Up to name a few. In between each clip, there's interviews with people like Larry Beckett, who co-wrote a lot of tunes with Buckley, Lee Underwood (Buckley's guitarist) and author David Browne. There's also an album by album commentary with Beckett and Underwood, which provides some interesting information on each release. Now that I think about it, calling this release a documentary doesn't really do it justice. It's more like a tribute, a celebration a Tim Buckley's life and his music, which went through a lot of changes in a very short time span. "My Fleeting House" is also authorized by Tim Buckley's estate, which is probably one of the main reasons why this release was done up right. I should also point out that a lot of this old footage is taken from first generation sources. So, it's a good quality release in every sense of the word. A must have for any true Tim Buckley fan.
