Slip'N'Slide Records Memorial Day Weekend

Urban Works/MVD

Not one for vegetarians, Trick Daddy and Trina present 101 more reasons not to cross the Atlantic.

Like Spring-break (!!!!) witnessed through a veil of marmite, the Memorial Day Weekend DVD from Slip'N'Slide is a bizarrely compelling experience that leaves you slimy, scared and ashamed. Centring around the insufferable Trick Daddy, a man so stupid I lost my newly-grown wisdom teeth to grinding, Memorial Day is an hour or so of bums, bad hip hop and more bums. Inexplicably popular, we follow Trick from party to party, stopping occasionally to allow him new cornrows and chance to impart wisdom, as he lives it up in a Miami full of young Americans each keener than the next to either declare Trick as the next Messiah or to pull out body parts that should be kept under wraps for fear making children cry.

Helped by Trina, a female rapper with a strong feminine stance and well-worn but proudly-displayed body parts, the whole thing is amazingly bad in its editing, sound quality and design, but the thought of what might come next is always enough to keep watching; when will I see the next bosom? Or the next celebrity caught on film just long enough though to warrant their name on the cover, usually filmed from a distance with the aid of an infrared periscope?

Whether the whole thing is a genius collaboration of the worlds greatest minds or the creation of a few perverts with a shit camera, Memorial Day is the single greatest reason to get back into bed and never go Stateside.
