

BIZZY BONE

When `{Bone Thugs-N-Harmony}` played Worcester, Massachusetts in the 1990s it was a combination of drama, tension, and a strange entertaining energy that made for a memorable concert. `{Bryon McCane}` solo in his `{Bizzy Bone}` persona delivers a decidedly low-fi but creative and interesting set of performances on this "documentary" of sorts with footage culled from Pueblo, Colorado on April 8, 2005 taped at `{The Pueblo Convention Center}` and material from a concert on May 11, 2005 at `{Peabodies}` in his hometown of Cleveland, Ohio. Don't expect pristine sound that one might find on a DVD from another genre, say `{Blues Caravan: The New Generation}`, the material here is taped Cinéma vérité and one has to strain the ears to hear on most of the disc. Lyrics appear onscreen on some selections including `{"Thugz Try"}`, the religious `{"Father"}` and `{"Nobody Can Stop Me"}`, which makes for a fun translation of sorts, especially when the rapper gets into spitfire high gear. `{Troy Nethken}` and `{Johnny Givens}`, who handle the rapper's business affairs when he comes to Cleveland, are interviewed at the end of the one hour presentation and there's interesting footage spliced in-between many of the songs showing the rhythmic performer in his element at `{Wrap N Roll Studios}`. Producer `{John Lorince}` offers few frills, some split screen, mixing `{Andrea Graziano}`'s stage camera with other imagery. The DVD is indexed for pretty good navigation track to track.
