Man, gay guys have it so easy. If the rest of us could just go online and find someone ready for us to just show up and stick it in, the world would probably be a happier place. At least in theory. This documentary explores the gay phenomenon of cruising chat rooms and finding instant sexual gratification with anonymous partners looking for nothing more than a quickie in a public restroom or stranger's bedroom. As the film progresses, we see firsthand accounts of how hooking up can go from a thrillingly seedy activity to an addiction that ultimately leads to feelings of isolation, depression and a longing for more meaningful intimate relationships. And the appeal of modern technology offering an immediate party filled with dirty sex soon wears thin as lives spin out of control through drug addiction, loneliness and other psychological issues.
