Ever since his tragic death Benny Hill's legacy has been ever so slowly dragging itself back into the nations consciousness, whether it be through Blur's Hill pastiche, the 'Country House' promo video or the long line of Benny Hill best of's and programme's obsessed with his life, or more accurately, his secret life. Like many sitcoms and comedians of the time that have lost favour due to their humours ability to offend minorities who now enjoy more equality, it seems like an admission of racism or sexism to say you enjoy the humour of Hill, which in itself is silly as that was only a minute part of the whole picture with Hill, and in these enlightened times we all wish to deject such claims as quickly and un-messily as possible!. In our more equality driven times it seems a little embarrassing, enjoying Hill's humour, like when your Uncle gets drunk at a wedding and tells racist jokes to people too shocked to move away. But if you can cut off that big flashing button in your mind and actually enjoy the stupidity of it all, you might find yourself enjoying a very guilty pleasure, especially the 30mins of unreleased footage...
