Boy/girl rock duos are all the rage these days. They run the gamut from synth-heavy indie to straight rock 'n' roll. While some of these acts enjoy more notoriety than others, none rocks harder than Australia-based brother-sister act BugGirl.

The band's style mixes odd time signatures with enjoyably sloppy, nonstop guitar riffage to create lo-fi garage-punk anthems. Sure, BugGirl has blues-rock influences, but its got a lot more.

Pretend BugGirl raided your record collection, took a small piece of each of your old standby rock favorites and used them to write songs. It's as if The White Stripes were led by Janis Joplin and then joined up with a Motorhead-sized AC/DC (but with more interesting drum work). In the midst of a world tour, BugGirl comes to The Underground for another Johnny Pink masterpiece of a show.

Word is, the last time BugGirl came through town, those of us not in attendance missed a remarkable musical experience. Don't make the same mistake twice.

THIS WEEK'S SFR PICKS

Indie Rocks! with Lousy Robot, The Scrams and Suicide Lanes

As huge fans of the "three bands for 5 bucks" concert structure, we are super-psyched for the 12th installment of El Paseo's Indie Rocks! series and the three killer Albuquerque bands sure to live up to the event's name.
