During a recent chat with My Global Mind, Schenker was asked about the hatred he got over the years and just how much has the Internet eased the spreading of hate.

"Yes, but that goes with life - the more famous you are, the more shit you get," guitarist says. "I am blessed and totally grateful because I am not sticking out like a sore thumb, and I'm not totally unknown. I am in a very comfortable place where I can enjoy lots of peace and still have ... It's a very good place that I am in."

The axeman continued, saying, "I don't go into a supermarket and see a big headline about myself, shit about shit that doesn't even exist, or paparazzi coming up and disturbing my peace. I don't have that, so I can walk around and have my peace."

He also remembered the time when he was jumped by fans and even referred as God. "That used to happen, though, and it would get on my nerves. When I was younger, people kept running after me and telling me, 'Schenker is God.' I couldn't deal with that, you know. I didn't want to know about that."

When asked whether he is a religious man, the guitarist replied, "I don't know what that means. I have body, mind and soul and I am all of that. It's good to look after all three aspects in order to keep a balance."

Schenker's latest solo release, "Temple of Rock," came out back in September 2011, peaking at No. 37 on the UK Rock Album Charts.
