Larry Carlton and Steve Lukather Band:...

Like the other New Morning releases in-akustik has offered on Blu-ray, Larry Carlton and Steve Lukather is presented via an AVC encode in 1080i and 1.78:1. As most of these other releases have been, the image quality on this release is not top tier. Unfortunately, even more than some of the other New Morning releases, this outing suffers from an overly soft and blurry image which is further hobbled by stage lighting that seems to work at odds with the filming. Only in extreme close-ups do we get anything approaching hi-def clarity and pop. Colors are decent throughout, with good to excellent saturation, but again, it's only in the close-ups that things really resonate fully. There's moderate to severe crushing in the darker segments and contrast is at odds with the bright lighting a lot of the time.

Larry Carlton & Steve Lukather Band: The Paris Concert Blu-ray, Audio Quality

Much better are the two lossless audio options, DTS-HD Master Audio 5.1 and LPCM 2.0, both of which present the music in full flower, with a lot of fiery action throughout all frequencies. Fidelity is spot on, highlighting Luke's blistering attack and Carlton's more refined, laid back approach. Bass, drums and keys are all spread naturally throughout the soundfield and provide ample low end throughout the set. The drums are especially well positioned and extremely present without being overwhelming. Crowd noise does not intrude very much during the songs themselves, but fills the surrounds during the applause interstitials. Any fans of either or both of these fine headliners will be more than satisfied with the reproduction of these excellent lossless mixes.
