

My Breakfast With Blassie (Legend House): In a spoof of the classic, well sort of, 'My Dinner With Andre,' 'My Breakfast With Blassie' is a brilliant look at two enigmatic and eccentric men in Andy Kaufman and 'Classy' Freddie Blassie who both did monumental things for their respective industries, that couldn't be more alike. Both men are neurotic germaphobes, showcased perfectly when a table of women next to them asks Kaufman for an autograph, which he obliges then berates them for bothering his meal, only to try and pick one of them later. Highlights of the breakfast session include Blassie calling Jerry Lawler a 'birdbrain' when referring to the infamous incident in which Kaufman 'injured' his neck after a piledriver from Lawler, Blassie waxing nostalgic about his career including run-ins with crazy fans, injuries, and people he's met along the way including Robert Stack and Elvis Presley, Kaufman selling Blassie a used magic prop and finding humor in a man vomiting all over their breakfast table and Blassie telling Kaufman to get the check. This is a truly amazing DVD, from the feature all the way down to the extras that feature in-depth looks at Blassie and Kaufman as well as the producers. If a picture is worth a 1000 words, then 'My Breakfast With Blassie' is priceless.
