CD Review: Fields Of Green by Rick Wakeman

If you don't stand for something you might lose it by time

Like in 1996 the BBC contacted Rick Wakeman and asked him to contribute to their May '97 election coverage, Rick came up with a unique reworking of his opus Arthur. There are few musicians alive, or dead for that matter, that have Wakeman's colossal ability to compose, arrange, and re-arrange music. People talk about the Beatles, but not Rick Wakeman. People talk about the Beatles' influence on modern music, and I don't think you can ignore the influence that will be remembered as the future are people like Andrew Lloyd Webber and Rick Wakeman.

Rick has more skill in his left pinky than the entire line up of the Beatles and The Stones combined!

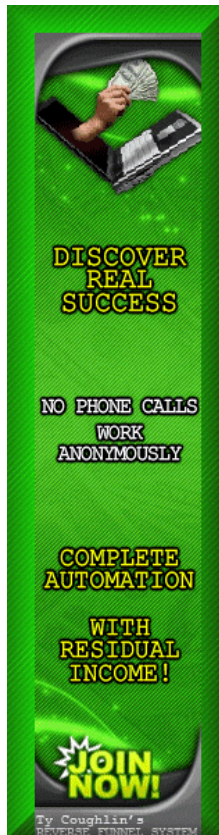

Fields Of Green is an interesting work, combining both his more modern approach to using acoustic instruments together with the 'techno head' Moog mad scientist that he was in the 70's with The Strawbs and Yes.

One interesting aspect of being a music reviewer is receiving peoples feedback. And I have never heard anyone say that they didn't like Rick Wakeman. Some people have never heard of him, some know the tunes but not the name, some of course are just Luddites, and there is little hope for reforming them! The music lover though knows exactly who Rick Wakeman is.

I am always amazed at the breadth of his compositions. When you deal with Rick you never know what to expect, other than the fact it's going to be good. Track five The Never Ending Road is a fine example, this could become an anthem for a whole generation, and one that likely should. 'Take time, Make time, Walk Through history', he invites us in the refrain, what greater commentary on todays society could we have?
