Fu Manchu

We Must Obey (Century Media)

If life is a highway, Fu Manchu is its soundtrack. Over the last dozen years, the Southern California quartet has perfected the art of the riff, mastered the depth of the groove, and sharpened the edge of the hook – and as their 10th album We Must Obey proves, the group's always-rockin' van still has plenty of gas left in the tank. Co-produced by Andrew Alekx (Weezer, Rancid, Queens of the Stone Age) and the band themselves, the record is infectious, inspiring and, most importantly, authentic - the sound of a time - and road tested group cruising along confidently yet effortlessly.

Vader

Kingdom (MVD)

There are very few bands that have managed to weave a web of mystery around them. Very few have survived and kept going strong until today. When faced with the question, people tend to mention American death-mongers with the likes of Morbid Angel, Deicide, or Cannibal Corpse. However, for a few years now, in the same breath, many have named Vader, perhaps the only band from Europe which has sustained its status for a number of years. Kingdom is a classic EP from 1998, this reissue contains 2 bonus tracks.

Skinny Puppy
Mythmaker (SPV)

Over the course of 22 years and 13 albums, electronic-rock mavericks Skinny Puppy brought noise, fear and a wake-up call to the industrial-rock nation, as well as alternative music fans in search of something a little more edgier than old 12-inch remixes of Depeche Mode and Devo. Cevin Key's harrowing soundscapes, coupled with the charismatic delivery of frontman Ogre, heightened listener's anxiety level in ways no synthesizer-based outfit ever dreamed.
