Delight: Breaking Ground

I have no idea who the hell this lot is or where they came from but damn do I like what I hear. From the outset, they storm in with their female led power metal pop. I know it might seem lazy, but this is what the last Evanescence album should have been. The opening track called "Divided" just storms in to let you know this lot really mean business.

If you ever cared to hear what Britney Spears would sound like if she got her metal on then check out "Sleep With the Light On". It's another stormy track that is both catchy and menacing at the same time. To hear Spears-like over-dubs used so effectively is quite fun.

It rarely happens that you hear a new band who eloquently pull you into their musical world. It sounds a bit familiar granted, but that is not entirely a bad thing when it's done this well. There is a not a dog on this CD. Every single track has something going for it in one way or other.

Those who like the poppy end of the female-led, goth-rock field should definitely check out this lot. There is just something about this release that oozes loads of quality and panache. Not every metal release from Poland is scary and evil.
