Any tips for a first time atv flat tracker?

well on the 13th of feb. i will be doing my first quad short flat track race. i ride a yamaha banshee. it will be a dirt race. and i have never raced my quad before...but i have all the gear and i have been riding quads for over 12 years. any one have any tips?

Wear good gear. Ride fast... faster than everyone. Don't crash. Thats pretty much it.

For dirt races, remember:

hit the jump at medium throttle take the turns a bit easy, get the feel of the turn before you actually put some turn into the bar(helps against skidding out and rear sticking out) while landing, stability and stance of the rider is important(based on front set of wheels or rear set of wheels hit first) finally dont try to be too aggressive. a little aggression is good, anything else is not going to help.

Hope this helps.

I love flat trackin'!! I raced 1/4 mile flat track for several years on a bike, but have only ridden a quad on a flat track a couple times. I have spent a lot of time watching the quad racers between my heats though. In ATV flat track it is all about body positioning and of course the proper tire selection. The Banshee should work awesome for flat track since it will break loose pretty easy for power sliding. If you don't have a compression release installed to throw you into the power slide, quickly gearing down a couple gears should do it. If possible you want to gear the quad so that you are in top gear wound out almost completely when entering turns 1 and 3. If you let off of the throttle and at the same time kick it down 2 gears without using the clutch. This should be enough to break the back end loose a bit, then almost immediately you get back on the gas hard to put it in a power slide. Hold that throttle on as long as possible. Enter the turn low and exit high.
