

Sunn 0))) or Earth in sheer width and girth. It's a slow, grinding, downtuned guitar crunch, with chaotic drums keeping things lively. The spastic, agonized vocalizations are feral and frightening, in such a good way, too. Picture, if you will, classic early SWANS meeting black metal, and Habsyll are threatening like that.

Refreshingly intense and confusingly evil sounds to scare your neighbors and antagonize your roommates equally!

On June 1, the top selling female group in country music will be releasing a new album, their first in three years. Playlist includes a list of the Dixie Chicks' themselves favorite songs from their past four albums. The 12 songs include "Wide Open Spaces" and "You Were Mine"

...middle of a concert that the band was ashamed President Bush was from their home state of Texas.) The Dixie Chicks may be known the country over for their controversial statements, but their music outdoes the world's expectations.

HeWhoCannotBeNamed – Sunday School Massacre (MVD Audio)

Legendary masked punk-grime legends the Dwarves have been known for many things in the past. Upbeat, well-produced pop punk isn't something that comes immediately to mind. But longtime guitar player HeWhoCannotBeNamed's debut solo album here shows an interesting twist on the gutter-punk philosophy that his "money" band excels at. "Happy Suicide" is fast, fun, and more than legible, and the cover DOESN'T feature any nudity or, ahem, actual dwarves this time. What HeWhoCannotBeNamed proves is that he is a more than capable songwriter, with a penchant for a number of tempos and rollicking sing-along choruses. "Superhero" is positively anthemic, while "Duck Tape Love" is a feel-good song about love love and the ways to "make you mine." "Toxene" is even a tongue-in-cheek ballad! Of course, this "solo" work also includes the participation of friends like Nick Oliveri (Queens of the Stone Age), Blag Dahlia (Dwarves), and Andy Selway (KMFDM). Fun punk melodies, strong production, some possibly offensive content -- this is 33 minutes of fun, with spirit and guts.

Cool stuff.
