If you don't know who Black Lips, Mastodon, and Deerhunter are then you are not plugged into the Atlanta, GA, music scene. We Fun: Atlanta GA Inside/Out is an out-there documentary starring such outrageous characters as King Khan, a Black Lips band member with talking pecs. It's a trippy look at musicians who started with small gigs—parties, parks, and local clubs—and moved on to world audiences.

Groups, including the Carbonaras, Bobby and the Softspots, and Subsonics, talk about what it's like playing Atlanta, and interview segments alternate with live performances and behind-the-scenes footage of band members just goofing off—or being goofy. It's important to remember that everyone's definition of "fun" is not the same; nevertheless, these performers appear to be having a great time.

Expect to hear street language as these talented musicians express their feelings about the work they do, the music they play, their fans, and their experiences on the road and in Atlanta. They openly talk about their lives before they achieved their current success, drink, joke, play whirly ball, and perform. To keep things interesting, sometimes they shed their gear. All of this is played to a soundtrack that includes solid and not-so-solid punk.

We Fun: Atlanta GA Inside/Out is the Black Lips' movie, and they have fun with it. The documentary is as rough as the people it features. The sound quality is not always that great, and the editing can be a little choppy. However, it is a virtual tour that could only be provided by insiders, and viewers can expect a riotous ride.
