Creep Creepersin's Ding Dong Dead and He DVD Reviews

Today we are going to do a double shot of Independent Movies from Writer/Director/Producer Creep Creepersin. In the past we have check out out Cutthroat Corporate Massacre and the stylish Frankenstein but this time around I will be talking about Ding Dong Dead and He.

Ding Dong Dead

Awkward loaner Doug (Luke Y Thompson) lives in a fantasy world where he has a job and the attractive neighbor across the street wants him. When he finally works up the nerve to go outside and water the lawn while she is outside in order to strike up a conversation even he is shocked when she speaks to him as if he were normal. Soon Doug agrees to lend a hand by getting her mail and keeping an eye on her house while she is on vacation.

Soon Doug's elation at the thought of female interaction is interrupted by a group of girls who have a fetish for dressing up in black and then ringing doorbells and running off. Calling themselves the Ding Dong Ditchers, the group soon overrun Doug's neighborhood and even his neighbor's house, which he is supposed to keep an eye on. As the girls have fun at the expense of an unstable Doug, he gets tired of their games and decides not to be pushed around anymore. Soon after one of the Dodgers sprays him with his own hose, Doug snaps.

Ding Dong Dead starts out as a quirky little indie film with an annoyingly repetitive soundtrack. We immediately find out that Doug is a creepy loser who is deeply repressed. His constant comments of "You like it when Dougie waters the lawn!" made the child in me laugh on several occasions. After the DDDs up the ante and declare war on Doug the movie launches into a very different direction as a deranged Doug runs around taking out the Dashers.

I liked the movie and have to say it is the best of Creep Creepersin's movies that I have seen thus far. The music purposefully is a bit grating at the beginning but it adds to the bizarreness of the entire movie. Even after Doug snaps the movie maintains a bizarre feel that carries through the ironic ending.

He

HE is the story of a somewhat simple man (Creep Creepersin) who lives with his wife that appears to hate him. As he prepares to start a new job we get an intimate look into his bizarre life, including apparent hallucinations and other random oddness.

I love a bizarre movie that leaves the viewer to try and interpret what is real and what is in the main character's head. Spiral comes to mind as a great example. With HE Creep Creepersin attempts the same approach and at times does a great job. The pacing on this movie is quite slow and deliberate, even for a movie that lasts just over an hour. I get Creepersin's approach at layering in the verbal abuse from the unnamed wife and at slowly hinting that more may be wrong with the movie than one would initially believe but it still drags a bit by the 40 minute mark.

I don't hate HE; however, I did not find it as much fun as Ding Dong Dead and it is not a movie that I would revisit. It is competently filmed and Creepersin shows he is just as comfortable in front of the camera as he is behind it. I did like the odd "Proceed" messages and random visits from the mysterious woman as they helped blur the line between reality and the man's mind nicely.

Living up to his name, Creep Creepersin does well in delivering offbeat and odd cinema. He tends to focus in on that awkward relationship that many men experience toward women, often pushing it to the extreme to create interesting characters, both good and bad. In the spirit of independent filmmaking he has shown quite a knack for working within a budget without making the movie look like there was no budget. Special effects in these movies are normally used sparingly but effectively which is another positive.

If you enjoy indie horror movies then Creep Creepersin's movies are definitely worth checking out. Creepersin is an auteur that is willing to step into whatever roles are needed to get the movie finished and has written, directed, produced and even starred in various films. These movies are fun and at times, well...creepy so support independent horror and pick one up. I recommend you start with Ding Dong Dead.

Ding Dong Dead and He are both available on DVD courtesy of MVD Releasing and Creep Creepersin.
