has been said that if life hands you lemons, you should make lemonade. But what are you supposed to do when life hands you "Ding Dong Dead" (2009), directed, written, shot and produced by Creep Creepersin? You review it, that's what. You review the crap out of it. You review it so hard that you completely forget that you are sitting alone in a dark room littered with Miller Lite cans and loneliness on a Thursday night. So that is exactly what I did. While alone. In a dark room. On a Thursday night.

“Ding Dong Dead” tells the story of a working-class man named Doug, played by Luke Y. Thompson, and his problem with pranksters. The movie opens with Doug receiving a call from his boss telling him that he will have to fire him for being late. Doug attempts to stutter his way out of being terminated, but, alas, he failed. It would appear that Doug’s beauty sleep had been interrupted by loud noises caused by rambunctious prowlers. It’s a shame Doug’s beauty sleep was cut short, because if anyone could benefit from some beauty assistance, its him.

Doug apparently has a crush on his neighbor Claudia, played by Elina Madison. I know this is going to sound strange, but Claudia looks like the kind of women that would work at an office that needs her to fire one of her employees, but, just as those employees are preparing performance files that would save their jobs, a mystery person starts killing all of those employees. She also looks like she would work in a place that would never answer any of the damn phones.

Above: Yeah, I don't know. I just get that feeling. Wish I knew why.

Claudia confirms that she also heard strange noises during the night, and is concerned that people are trying to break into her house. Doug promises to keep a vigilant watch over their cul-de-sac and then sets off on an adventure that consisted of him mumbling to himself while going to the store to get a Big Gulp.

While returning from his quest, Doug's car was blocked by a "...hippy, gippy, daisy chain shit" of women that made him mumble to himself even more. It turns out that the chain of ladies preventing Doug from returning to his home to (probably) masturbate were in fact the noisy people that have been causing all of the trouble every night. Doing what he believed was the right thing, Doug alerted the authorities to the dangerous gang of goth chicks roaming around and causing all sorts of ruckus.

The viewers are then taken to the ding-dong-ditchers' hide out where we learn of their devious plans. It turns out, they are nothing more than a collective group of women that enjoy committing acts of petty mischief. Unfortunately for Doug though, because he called the police on them, they must now seek revenge. How did they find out about Doug calling the police, you ask? Well, because they have an informant on the inside, that's why. Why wouldn't they?

While seeking revenge using standard-issue revenge tactics (throwing eggs, spraying him his garden hose, continually ringing his doorbell and then running away), things get a little out of hand amongst the pranksters. One of the Ding Dongs goes against protocol and sprays poor Doug with the garden hose for too long. One of the other Dongs reprimands her by shoving her into a flower pot, breaking her neck. This kills her instantly. The pusher runs back to the others and pretends that the now dead Donger was kidnapped by Doug.

It should be noted at this point, the each Donger had the initials D.D. in front of their respective names. Though the initials are never explained, I'm sure the initials are either a title, like H.H. (His Holiness) or a reference to their favorite comedian, Carlos Mencia's, catchphrase "De-De-Duh." I hope that it's the former and not the latter because Carlos Mencia isn't funny. Not when compared to Jeff Dunham. Now there's a comedian. A talking jalapeno? On a stick? Man, where does he come up with stuff like that?

Above: This movie would have been the perfect cameo roll for Dee Dee Ramone.

The Dongers regroup and plan to recapture their friend, thinking that she is still among the living. Doug finds the corpse and believes that he must killed her in a blind rage, so he figures why not kill again? As the Ding Dong team surrounds Doug's home, he kills them off one by one in a glorious, smile-filled, killing spree. After drowning one of his victims in her own urine, Doug sets his sights on the groups leader. Before he can finish her off though, his door bell rings, and thinking it must be another member of the group, he shoots the doorbell ringer on sight. I don't want to spoil the surprise for anyone, but I am pretty certain of two things:

1. No one is going to read this review.
2. No one is going to go out and watch this film.

That being said, the person he ends up ding dong deading was his crush, Claudia. And then the movie ends. Hurray!

I'm going to give "Ding Dong Dead" two Amox's out of five, but in a suprise twist, I'm going to give myself five Nedloh's out of five for writing a 900 word review and not laughing at the word "dong." Ha ha, dong. Damn, oh well.
