LOGLINE & SYNOPSIS

Synopsis: A demonic turkey is unleashed...and he's one fowl-mouthed bastard! Five of our favorite college kids: a jock, a good girl, a fat hick, a slut, and a nerd head home for Thanksgiving break, each thankful for the chance of holiday hookups. But when their car suddenly overheats, they trespass into the woods for a night of drinking and bonfire debauchery. Little do they know, these are the same woods where an ancient turkey was necromanced 386 years ago by an Indian curse after the very first Thanksgiving. Now, The Killer Turkey is awakened and ready for revenge on the first white men he comes in contact with! But when one of the kids comes face to face with the maniacal bird, the rest of the gang refuses to believe that a potty-mouthed turkey really exists. As the kids get back on the road to home, they are unaware the turkey has hijacked a car and followed them back. And just when all seems safe, The Killer Turkey pecks apart the their families one by one in his path of revenge. Before the holiday is ruined for good, the friends must find a method to kill the turkey with their only hope resting in the content of a book written by a renowned turkeyologist!

ThanksKilling is a horror comedy that is sure to beak – oops, we mean freak – you out and have you laughing to the point of tears! It's “a perfectly portioned mix of comedy, gore, and campiness” says Matt Molloy of Scars Magazine. Gobble, Gobble, Motherf@#%$rs!

Satanic Turkey Rampage in ThanksKilling

THE ULTIMATE LOW-BUDGET EXPERIENCE!

More than just a film about a killer turkey, ThanksKilling is an experience! It started with two guys setting out to see how much they could do, with so little. Casting was done in a garage, the turkey puppet fell apart by the end of the film, and distribution came and went many times. The film was shot in 2007 when creators Kevin Stewart and Jordan Downey were still in college, and took another two years to finish.

ThanksKilling promises nothing but a cheesy good time. It's the perfect cult film to watch around the holidays, especially Thanksgiving! Laugh at it because it's funny...laugh at it because it's bad...it's meant to be taken with a grain of salt.

BUDGET

The fowl-mouthed turkey slasher was shot for $3,500 in 14 Days. The filmmakers later acquired an investment to complete ThanksKilling for under $10,000 total, including marketing and distribution. The methods for pulling a feature in for this price are detailed on the website and DVD making-of.

CREATORS' BIOS

KEVIN STEWART

Born in Paris, Kevin grew up in Porto, Portugal where he always loved watching a good cheesy horror movie. After making short films of his own, he found filmmaking to be his passion and moved to LA where he has now worked on over 100 films in 5 years in Hollywood including the hit horror feature Splinter. Kevin graduated from Loyola Marymount University's School of Film and Television. He took home the Best Cinematography award at the Film Outside the Frame ceremony at the Director's Guild of America for short film Craw Lake in 2007. He also won LMU's Ian Conner Cinematography Award in May 2008. While serving as co-creator of ThanksKilling, Kevin is an avid photographer and has shot Super16mm, 35mm, and hi-end high definition with the Oakley Red One.

JORDAN DOWNEY

Born the same year his favorite film Critters was released, Jordan grew up on a farm in Ohio with a curiosity for science fiction and creatures of the unknown. Friday nights consisted of renting B-movie horror flicks, and after making some money off a garage sale, Jordan bought his own camcorder. He began telling stories with actions figures, masks, and family & friends as the cast. In high school, he ran lights and sound for the theater department and eventually studied under Randy Smith who worked on Hollywood blockbusters for years as a boom operator. Jordan's passion for filmmaking inspired him to move to Los Angeles, where he would attend Loyola Marymount University's School of Film & Television. His first year in LA, he immediately attended the horror film festival, Los Angeles Screamfest. Two years later, he returned to premiere his horror short Craw Lake, which he made to promote a feature script. Drawing from the B-movies that inspired him as a kid, he teamed up with friend Kevin Stewart to make the ultra-low budget horror comedy feature ThanksKilling even before starting work on his thesis film in college. He had just turned 21 when ThanksKilling was shot. He currently resides in Los Angeles.
