Believe me, people, I knew what I was getting into the minute I decided to review this horror no-budgeter. I mean look at that cover. It's far from being FRIDAY THE 13TH worthy, even though it tries the heck to be. Even the plot is the same; you know, kids go to the woods kids get dead, just like the title goes. And there's nothing wrong with that, really, unless the end-result is less to be desired, in which case, a not so good review is in order. Since this film ultimately turns out being just that, why don't we just get right down to business and bash the film a little.

The premise, being what it is, fails to work on every level. As much as it tries to be hip and cool, it just isn't. But what really kills it, however, is the long haul where nothing really exciting happens. Mind you, the film aims mostly at a younger crowd, meaning you've got to be in the right demographic to enjoy it. So if female forms, a little sex act and sophomoric behavior is your thing, then by all means go for it and watch it. You won't find more a derivative horror flick than this one. But I promise you, you'll get fed up rather quickly, for the hit factor is just not there. Even when the action explodes in the last half hour or so, you'll probably have checked out by then. No big whoops, really, since the special effects are on the sub-par side anyway, as most kills are mostly off-camera.

What IS interesting is the way writer/director/producer Michael Hall chooses to present his film: like a vintage late night feature on TV with mocked commercials and interludes emceed by one Candy Adams whose rather nifty in her double-entendre repertoire. A truly fun gimmick, especially for those who are old enough to recall it. Also, I've got to give props to the cast of players who, in this flick, manage to be believable (to a certain degree) amid the onscreen hot mess. They bring a certain flavor to their respective roles which is highly appreciated, making the viewing experience all the less painful.

Shot on a camcorder, KIDS GO TO THE WOODS KIDS GET DEAD isn't the worse movie to hit my flat TV screen but it's very far from being the best either. I imagine it will nonetheless find some fans. This type of film always does. And these people will also dig the short deleted scenes, the five minute gag reel, and the couple featurettes included in this disc. The image and sound quality, by the way, is fine, although the exterior scenes look kind of stretched out sometimes. But, hey, they sure as heck aren't as bothersome as the Neanderthal way some of the male protagonists act in this 83 minute slasher. What the script makes them do is beyond me. Or is it just that I'm getting too old for this crap? Enter at your own risk.
