The Stone Roses documentary Made of Stone, following the seminal rockers from their 1983 formation to their 2012 reunion tour, had its British premiere back in May. The Shane Meadows-directed film made its Stateside debut last weekend at CBGB Fest in NYC, and now Syndctd has revealed a long list of North American theatrical screening dates.

Beginning November 6th, music and film buffs alike can check out Made of Stone in a handful of states. Most venues have a second showing penciled in between the 10th and 13th as well. You can find a complete list of dates and theaters, including ticketing information, at the documentary's website.

In addition, you'll be able to take the film home when it hits DVD (pre-order here) and Blu-ray (pre-order over here) on December 3rd. Check out a four minute clip, during which frontman Ian Brown states "I think we could be the biggest band ever," over at Rolling Stone, and watch the trailer below.
