

ED REVIEWS

Warren Jackson Hearne

Black Mouth EP
Gloomadeer Records

If it wasn't for my co-worker Collen telling me about The Slow Poisoner show

I would have missed Warren Jackson Hearne's awesome performance at Bar of Soap a few weeks ago. This is the kind of music I've really been getting into lately. Which acoustic guitars and sad, sorrowful vocals. WJH reminds me a lot of Nick Cave and a little bit of Angels of Light. My favorite song on her is "If I had a choice", which for some reason reminds me of a Paul Williams song in "Phathom of the Paradise" movie. This a perfect CD to play when you're tired and want to chill or play it when you're feeling blue. It won't cheer you up, but it will help you feel not so alone. I just looked up his Myspace and Warren will be playing this Friday at J & J's Pizza in Denton. -Gil Russell

myspace.com/warrenjacksonhearne

H2O

CBGB: The Bowery Collection Live August 19, 2002
MVDaudio

I didn't know till I goggled this band that they had been around since 1996.

The first time I heard of them was probably around the time this live show was recorded. Once again the sound on this "CBGB: The Bowery Collection" is excellent, making me sad I never got to see a band live at the legendary venue. The band, H2O, is actually better than I expected. I was thinking it would sound like The Offspring, but no it has the New York hardcore edge with the melodic sounds of Dag Nasty and Bad Religion. During the live show there are guest vocals from members of Madball, Civ and a few others. -GR

Today Is The Day

Axis of Eden
Supernova Records

Today is The Day is probably the heaviest, eviliest and sickest band you'll ever hear. This music is like the background sounds of war... the war over you freedom of rights. Singer/guitarist Steve Austin has something to tell you and he has the guns to prove it. Are you disappointed with metal lately with all it's emotional whining. Then get this CD and feel the urge to destroy. -GR