'Sonic Portation'

Multi-decade spanning psychedelic improvisation, hmm...

Okay, this is about as weird as you can get right here. Yahowa 13's history is rich and thus cannot be done justice in this here review, however the group originated in 1969 with the now deceased (killed in a hang-gliding accident) Father Yod, the spiritual leader of the Source Family cult.

The original recordings of the Yahowa 13 were completely improvised and recorded straight after meditation sessions that took place in the Source Family commune between three and six AM. 'Sonic Portation' is much of the same, though in a slightly more modern twist was recorded in Infrasonic Sound Studios in California.

If you're still reading and wondering what the recording sounds like, it's definitely worth a listen. This six song, 35 minute trip into the mind was recorded by three members of the Source Family and contains drums, guitars, sitars and ominous, ominous bass as well as geometric triangular pattern chanting (I told you). You can definitely tell it's improvised and created by some odd people and once you have read the liner notes that explain the names and themes of the songs, you still don't entirely know what's going on.

Not a conventional record by far, but an interesting modern insight into what these cults conjure up and with a more in depth knowledge of the original Yahowa 13, Father Yod and the Source Family, it could actually be just what you've been looking for in your life.

Or, you know, take peyote and trip balls whilst it's on. Each to their own.
