In other news, there are apparently a bunch of self-satisfied Marxists running around Venezuela; this has been documented in the new DVD release "Venezuela: Revolution From the Inside Out." This just shows how oppressed I, as a relatively informed 'free' American citizen, really am! Director Clifton Ross takes his camera "Blair Witch" style around the Venezuelan countryside and apparently has found the most radical, rabid, revolutionary idealists around. Just for our own clarification, there is a crack pot team on the scene who are narrating the subtitles for us so that we get the full effect of just what is going on.

When I first watched this DVD, I clicked on the "Messages to the North American People" link just to see what I'd been missing. Mind you, there was a "Meeting Chavez" link in addition to the actual chapters and the video itself, so this wasn't even the actual DVD, but it was the first link in the clockwise upper left hand quadrant of the screen. And being an orderly person, I clicked this first.

I don't mean for my rhetoric to take such a slanted tone, but when you begin your film, talking to some Joe-blow on the street, and the first words out of this joker's mouth are "What good is all of Billy Gate's money, the richest man on the planet, if his peoples are unhappy?" Okay, I wish I had some of Bill Gate's money too, but Bill Gates doesn't owe anybody anything! And he does give to the charities of his choice! But really, when you, scraggly old man from Venezuela start in right off the bat telling the audience how Bill Gates is somehow a horrible person just because he doesn't distribute his wealth (which he earned) evenly across the world, that's just overstepping the line. Besides, it's not Bill Gate's job to make sure that everyone in the United States (which is what I'm assuming he meant when he said "his peoples") is happy! Just because you have money doesn't mean necessarily that you live a full life and that you're happy; just because you're poorer than dirt doesn't mean that you're unhappy and that your life is empty.

there is a freedom of speech here (in Venezuela, where I'm writing from) that is the envy of much of the world. I think my movie offers a balance between admiration for the numerous social programs aimed at eliminating hunger, misery, homelessness, illiteracy and insecurity and the implementation of those programs. I'd like to hear your opinion - after you watch the movie. You can rent it from netflix or pick it up from www.pmpress.org.

Thanks for your review of one of the extras in my video. Like the previous commentator mentioned, there is quite a bit more than the section-- like the movie itself, "Venezuela:Revolution from the Inside Out". For a pretty objective look at the movie that you neglected to review here, you might want to read this review at http://www.dvdtalk.com/reviews/33285/venezuela-revolution-from-the-inside-out/?\_\_rd=1 By the way, I don't happen to be a "rabid Marxist" but I do think it's important to hear what Venezuelans think about their own lives, their political processes, and us. We need to hear from them. I also think that North Americans need to educate themselves about the world, see themselves from the outside and learn about other cultures. By doing so they might learn many amazing things, like that Venezuela has a number of political parties that operate freely here, that a majority of the press is in the hands of the opposition to Chavez and that there is a freed

You watch the rest of the DVD about what's actually going on in Venezuela... its a lot more informative than the little extra that you are harping on
