Pigface

"Free For All"

(MVD)

by Paul Autry

This is...by far...the best tour documentary that I have ever seen. Seriously, most people think life on the road is all fun and games. It's the old sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll routine. I've seen that story told a number of times and...to be honest...that's what I expected to see this time around. However, this release is a little more down to earth. Of course, you get to see the magical madness of a Pigface show and what have you. But, there's a more personal side to be seen as well. You get to see more of who these people are. I think Cliff Sieloff brought a lot of personality into this release. You get to see these people for who they really are. Plus, you really get to see what actually goes into makin' a tour happen...all the hard work. Financial decisions that have to be made and what not. Drama and how it's dealt with. There's also some personal stuff that's mentioned. It's just...in a word...brilliant. Not at all what I thought it would be. You should have a lot of respect for the band after viewing this release. That's what I got out of it. You always hear talk of how a band might go that extra mile for the fans. Well, "Free For All" shows you just how far Pigface was willing to go and how much work they really put into it. They're quite inspirational if you ask me. That's why I would recommend this release to anyone who would care to listen. It's a perfect 10 as far as rock 'n' roll documentaries go. Well worth checking out.
