Jean-Marie Pallardy: Classics of French Erotica (My Body Burns / Erotic Diary Of A Lumberjack / Truck Stop)

Three skin flicks from the man who put the tit in titillation

Sometimes this job is a drag. It may seem fun, all guest list and free CDs, but sometimes it's harder to drag out 250 words about the latest turds in the indie toilet than it is to pass a fully-grown live goat through your digestive system. Then there are the times when a sack of French p0rn pops through your letterbox and suddenly your writers block disappears. This, dear friends, is one of those times.

“My Body Burns”, “Erotic Diary Of A Lumberjack” and “Truck Stop” are among the earlier works of the noted French director Jean-Marie Pallardy. Yes, while we Brits were busily proving our national stereotypes about sexual repression correct with the likes of the god-awful, nudge-nudge, wink-w@nk “Confessions” series, Pallardy and co were getting down and dirty with some rather classier erotica in the more liberal climes afforded to those on the other side of the Channel.

The difference between these films and the kind of fare commonplace all over the net nowadays is something of a cultural barometer – here it's all bums, tits (real of course) and big bushes, with no genital shots, let alone penetration, oral or personal fluids. There are even coherent storylines – all of which rather induces a yearning for a more innocent time before goat fisting and roman showers were available to anyone at the click of a mouse. By comparison to modern fare, these films are pure
