As the disaster that has happened to New Orleans takes hold, more outrageous since it was totally manmade, a new DVD set has arrived that does more than just remind us how vital the music of Louisiana is, but shows it in great detail. Maroon is the longest of three programs about the rich culture of music and art that has come out of the region and continues to do so, even in the face of disaster. Major music figures in the genre most people have not even heard of. Running 85 minutes, we learn more about The Creoles than you would ever hear otherwise.

Produced in Canada (like the bonus materials) for TV, the shows are like journeys to a land that has literally been swept away, but the makers treated the subject as that fragile to begin with and they were right. It makes compelling viewing to begin with, now carrying an added irony. The music is good, but you do not have to even like the music to appreciate what was accomplished here.

The 1.33 x 1 image was shot on analog NTSC video and it shows, but it still does not look bad for that, despite some minor digititis. The Dolby Digital 2.0 Stereo is simple at best and both extend to the supplemental materials. This includes two shorts on DVD 1 under 5 minutes and each two more documentaries on the second DVD. Zarico is a nearly hour-long look at Black Francophile Creole Folk Music, while Liberty Street Blues is a 77-minute-long takes us to a street where the days of slavery
