Style Wars

Arguably one of the most important documentaries about underground, graffiti culture ever made, "Style Wars" captures the early days of the New York City "writers." Part history lesson, part human accounts, the filmmaker did an incredible job balancing all sides of this socially potent topic. The film features interviews not only with graffiti artists, but also subway/government officials, citizens of the city, and even one of the artists' mother. An incredible account of not just graffiti, but the status of youth subculture in urban America during the late '70s/early '80s.
