A documentary about modular synths called I Dream of Wires will be released in June.

The four-hour film was written and directed by Robert Fantinatto, with Ghostly International regular Solvent, real name Jason Amm, working as a producer and co-writer, as well as composing its soundtrack. As Self Titled report, I Dream of Wires will feature interviews with a number of artists and label bosses, ranging from Planet E chief Carl Craig to Trent Reznor, Vince Clarke, Chris Carter, Legowelt, John Tejada, Container, James Holden, Deadmau5, Factory Floor's Dominic Butler and Mute founder Daniel Miller among others.

For an idea of what to expect, you can watch a 12-minute trailer for the film below (the interviews with Craig and Carter have also been posted online). You can also listen to Solvent's "Themogene," which features on the film's soundtrack, on SoundCloud.

 thebunneh - I Dream Of Wires focuses on the resurgence of modular synthesizers, not the history. We did speak to some people from the early years of modular synthesis, but not many. Because of this focus, seeking out people like Suzanne Ciani, Eliane Radigue, Laurie Spiegel, Pauline Oliveros, was not a priority. (We are planning a historical follow up - and we will seek out many of these women for that). BTW, that is actually Maggi Payne speaking in the trailer, not Laurie Spiegel. We spoke to... More
