DVD extended edition available now

I Dream of Wires is an independent documentary film about the resurgence of the modular synthesizer. The trailer for an extended edition, linked below, has already had nearly 30'000 views in only three days and features musicians such as Trent Reznor, Carl Craig and John Foxx. While the 85-minute theatrical cut will be seeing outings at film festivals in May, the four-hour long "Hardcore Edition" is now available for pre-order. Here's more from the film's makers.

I Dream Of

Press Release: I Dream of Wires (IDOW) is an upcoming independent documentary film about the phenomenal resurgence of the modular synthesizer — exploring the passions, obsessions and dreams of people who have dedicated part of their lives to this esoteric electronic music machine. Written and directed by Robert Fantinatto with Jason Amm (Ghostly International recording artist Solvent) serving as producer and co-writer, IDOW is set to premiere spring 2013. Inventors, musicians, and enthusiasts are interviewed about their relationship with an all-consuming passion. Established musicians such as Trent Reznor (Nirvana) and John Foxx (The Screamers) explain why they opt to use this volatile but ultimately rewarding generation of dance and electronica artists including Clark, James Holden & away from laptops to embrace the sound and physicality of modular synthesizers. Doepfer, driven by a desire to revive modular synthesizers, discuss how they have become a major cottage industry. What started out as a "vintage-revival scene" in the 1990s, the phenomena with a growing market of modular obsessives craving ever more radical new sounds and a bonafide subculture.
