DVD Review: The Osmond Brothers - Country Rockers

January 31st, 2008 by Simon Barrett

I guess my wife and I just get to listen and watch more than the average person, as soon as the announcer came on, we said in unison “Church Street Station, Orlando!” And we were correct. Church Street Station was a concert favorite in the mid 80’s, and this concert fits their typical make up. A headline act, in this case the three older Osmond brothers Alan, Wayne and Jay, and a couple of supporting acts, Curtis Young, and Danny Davis & The Nashville Brass.

The Osmond Brothers had made a decision in 1982 to move away from “The Osmond Brothers in America”: One you may think they would try their hand at Country. This concert was filmed in 1984, so they have 2 years of practice under their belt. While they may not be the biggest name, they certainly look and act the part. Wearing the prerequisite cowboy hats, and suitably ‘hatted’, they treat us to a relatively short set of Country To The City, Yes Mama, and Where Does An Angel Live? which are well executed, if a little lack luster for the hard core country fan.

Curtis Young does a fine job of singing with Who Do You Know In California, and An American Boy.

Danny Davies & The Nashville Brass are next up. Now I may just be a fuddy duddy, but brass and country rarely seem to play nicely together unless you are looking for a fiddle feel. A great example of that being Johnny Cash’s Ring Of Fire, there are hundreds of versions available, some have the trumpets, and some don’t. It is like two different songs!

Danny Davies though took it one stage further and incorporated a whole
