Trower became the bassist for Procol Harum about the time their classic version of Whiter Shade Of Pale was cut and stayed with them until the early 1970s, when he went solo and had at least as many hit albums as that famous band. Despite no hit singles, he was one of the big (and often forgotten) successes of the vinyl record album Rock era of the early to mid 1970s. His work remains very impressive, as does this concert, which runs over 111 minutes alone. He is a great showman, performer, loves what he does and has no end of talent or ways to use it.

The anamorphically enhanced 1.78 X 1/16 X 9 image was shot on newer videotape, though not specifically identified as digital High Definition. It has detail limits and colors have some slight hazing, but it is not bad otherwise. The sound options are Dolby Digital 5.1 and PCM 16Bit/48kHz 2.0 Stereo, both of which are good, about even with each other. Too bad Inakustik did not have DTS here, but there is good necessary bass sound here as well. Extras include stills and an on-camera interview with Trower about his career that runs over a half-hour.
